

i live and travel in my motorhome and satellite radio is my constant contact with life and living in america, finding local stations in new areas in my travels is a hit and miss experience and reception is limited. with satellite radio i am assured of good signal reception and information that is vital to me. time marches on and so does technology, local broadcasters have certainly done their best to keep up with both and are only limited by the constraints of signal, market and competition, so should the public be limited by those same constraints if they can utilize another technology that gives them access to information available to them at this point in time? the world utilizes the latest technology in every aspect of their lives. the NAB protects it's vested interests as i understand, because that is their mission, trying to eliminate competition of advanced technology is a fruitless and futile use of members resources and an insult to me a citizen of the united states of america. please don't intrude any further into my life.
